CEO MESSAGE

According to some estimates there may be 350,000 children with autism in Pakistan. At C-ARTS, these would be 350,000 stories of dreams and development. Each day at our center is a magical story in itself. We strive to provide professional rehabilitation facilities to the autistic children in the province of Sindh, train professionals in rehabilitation methods in ASD, and work for its awareness and increasing social empathy. With our multidisciplinary program model, the mission of the Center is to provide an integrated academic and therapeutic program to each individual with autism and other developmental disorders that they realize their fullest potential and to expand our impact through education, innovative research and public policy. Our logo, with pieces of a puzzle and a home inside a blue circle, depicts the puzzle pieces as primary symbols of autism, which date back to 1963, created by the National Autistic Society in London that believed autistics suffered from a puzzling condition. However, we have decided to give it a new meaning; to us, it is more of a sign of unity, ensconced in a blue circle that represents hope and a home for children and other people with ASD - puzzle pieces of therapies coming together to solve a single maze. This is a remarkable reflection of the work our teachers and our students do every day to achieve a unified goal for growth and rehabilitation. Autism doesn't come with an instruction guide; it comes with a family who will never give up. The world needs these families to work together. At C-ARTS, we are that family for these brilliant youngsters. We focus on what these children can do, not on what they cannot do. We take an interest in their interests. We look at autism with our hearts; because our eyes might miss something. We learn from them a thing or two, because these kids don't lie, they don't judge, they are miles away from the vice of this world. They are, indeed, the epitome of uniqueness, and we want to be the people helping them on their way to this realization.
